Community Preservation Funding Request: ~~$15,000~~ $7500.00

Brief Project Summary, Including Justification of Project Category Checked Above:

This project seeks to perform an archeological survey in two key areas of Orleans, the Nauset Estuary and South Orleans in the general area of Pleasant Bay. These areas are known to be significant in the history of the indigenous peoples that inhabited the land before British colonization and in the relationship between indigenous peoples and the explorers and colonists during the Contact Period.

The project will seek to identify specific areas of interest and assess their significance by conducting a Phase 1A sensitivity survey which is the most basic level of archaeological survey. This will be an assessment of the potential for intact archaeological resources to be present in a project area. This process involves historical research, environmental context review, and field inspection. The Orleans Historical Commission will seek input from local Native American organizations in the execution of this project.

Based on the findings of the reconnaissance survey, the project will produce a report with recommendations for further action regarding one or both target sites.

The use of Community Preservation Act funds for this purpose has long been established. For example, the Community Preservation Coalition Website says: “Although it is sometimes overlooked, the ability to fund archaeology projects is a unique and valuable aspect of the Community Preservation Act.”

Detailed Narrative

The history of the land that became Orleans did not begin with the incorporation of the town in 1797. As described in an article on the Orleans Historical Commission website:

Nor did it begin in 1644, when the first English colonists arrived from Plymouth Colony to settle here. Archaeologists have estimated that Native American peoples inhabited the land for a period of 10,000-12,000 years before a sail from a European ship was ever spotted off these shores, beginning in the 15th and 16th centuries.

The land that became Orleans was a part of the larger area at the elbow of Cape Cod that was known as Nauset. The towns of Orleans, Eastham, Wellfleet, and parts of others now stand here. Upon the arrival of European explorers, this area was inhabited primarily by the Nauset tribe, a part of the Wampanoag Confederation that flourished in what is now southeastern Massachusetts and parts of Rhode Island. The Nausets, like other native tribes, did not have a written language and thus did not leave a written record of their lives, history, and experiences. However, through the passing of oral histories, discoveries of archaeologists, and contemporary observations of explorers, visitors, and colonists, we can appreciate the vibrancy and complexity of the Nauset civilization as well as the impact of colonization as they saw it.

This proposal seeks to build on previous work that has helped preserve the history of the people who inhabited this area for millennia. It has been long known that at least two sites, the Nauset Estuary and one in South Orleans in the general area of Pleasant Bay which have not been developed or substantially disturbed have the potential to provide an opportunity for the discovery of historical evidence of indigenous people. The use of Community Preservation Act funds for this purpose has long been established. For example, the Community Preservation Coalition Website says: “Although it is sometimes overlooked, the ability to fund archaeology projects is a unique and valuable aspect of the Community Preservation Act.”

The opportunity to preserve the history of the Native Americans who inhabited these sites will not always exist. Development, climate change and other factors will eventually alter the character and physical nature of the grounds that contain the artifacts and other evidence. The Orleans Historical Commission will seek input from local Native American organizations in the execution of this project.

Previous archaeological surveys in Orleans and Eastham have been very successful at finding important information and artifacts documenting the history of the area before the arrival of Europeans. Examples include the Coburn Burial Complex documented here and the Transitional Archaic Land Use at Namskaket Marsh documented in an article published here \(page 19\).

Given the importance of understanding the full history of our town and the proven value of this type of effort, there is a strong case for investing in a project that assesses the significance of these sites and makes recommendations for further action for historical preservation.
